Communicating as a Leader -t|n

Challenging Conversations with Colleagues

Teacher Learning Network

About the course

This session will support new leaders in their approach to managing challenging conversations with colleagues. In a formal leadership role there is pressure to respond to and resolve conflict situations with colleagues with whom we also have a collegial relationship as teachers in the same group or team. It is important for new leaders need to develop the social and emotional competencies required to move between their teaching role and their leadership role. The presenter will focus on practical conflict resolution skills to manage these challenging conversations.

Leaders who choose this session should also consider enrolling in Difficult Conversations with Parents and Difficult Conversations with Students. These additional events are offered on the same day.
