

Accessing support within your union

Western Teacher volume 54.4 July 2025

Starting any career can be overwhelming, especially when navigating workplace support. Teaching is no exception, especially with endless acronyms, policies and procedures to learn. Conditions secured by the SSTUWA, such as DOTT, graduate entitlements and class size limits, help maintain teaching quality, manage workload and support wellbeing. But what can you do if you believe these conditions aren't upheld?

Your first point of contact should be your workplace branch. Each year, members elect a union representative, deputy representative and women's contact officer, all of whom receive specialised training. If you're unsure who holds these roles, log into the member hub at sstuwa.org.au, ask colleagues, check the union noticeboard or contact Member Assist on 9210 6060 or memberassist@sstuwa.org.au

If your school doesn't have a union rep, contact Member Assist directly. This confidential service provides factual advice with no obligation to act. Member Assist operates from 10am–4:30pm on Mondays and 8:30am–4:30pm from Tuesday to Friday. You can also submit queries online here.

For issues that impact everyone at your branch, or even more broadly, consider speaking with your colleagues at a branch meeting. You may decide to write a branch motion together. Writing motions is the avenue a branch takes to have their say in how the union operates, and to influence decision making. Motions can be used to ask the union to investigate a district or system-wide issue, voice support of an initiative, or simply highlight a branch issue. SSTUWA committee members can also raise relevant issues at termly meetings.

By Simon Joachim
Growth Team officer

Teaching tip

The physical environment

The classroom environment influences student behaviour, engagement and lesson flow. A well-organised space fosters focus, reduces distractions and creates a sense of belonging.

Clear, defined spaces – Arrange desks to suit your teaching style. Provide quiet and movement-friendly areas where possible.

Reduce clutter – A tidy room supports a tidy mind. Keep surfaces clear, materials accessible and distractions minimal.

Visual cues and displays – Use word walls, anchor charts and student work displays to reinforce learning and foster pride.

.....

Use your union!

Whether you need advice on entitlements, guidance on workload

